> A BOUQUET . By Rev. Joe A. Munday.

Somedays since the tender hands of a christian lady of S anford convered to me a large and beautiful honquet, to which was attacted a card on which wes written: "I' save accept from ladies as a small token of sacir appreciation of the good work you are doing for the cause of promibition " In was made of the most beautiful and lovely Howers i ever saw, and was ever so much appreciated For days it was kept in my room until the withering hand robbed it of Its Iragiance and beauty. Frequently when I would lay myself down to rest after epeak. ing or preaching, I would gez; upon it and think, it is not only beautiful, but a teacher eent from God. Eich little ilower is a teacher so profound that they stand in refutable. They tell us of God.

I l'hoy teach of liss existence. Tue lie hef of the existence of God may be said to be natural to man, ilence, it may be deemed by some noncessary to enter up n a proof of lin existence; and to others it may appear irreverent, because it seems, itthe first instance, to call in question a truth of which it la implety to doubt. But athe tem has been avowed. The spirit of impie ty hes gone forth and is laboring by aris of suphistry to persuade men to throw away their bibles and their reason. Pretentions are made to demonstrate that there is no intelligent Balng who presides over nature . no Law-giver whom we are bound to obey; no Judge who will call us to account In shitt!, that the idea of a Gad, wise, right eous and holy, is a superstitious dream. Persons teaching such hereny, though profeering to he learned, and perhaps even claiming to be the guardians of science, are nevertheless Its greatest encuries, and are deinded by their own reasoning. But the unhelief of men can not frown truth into falsehood, nor can the helief of men amile -faleshood into truth. Hancs the helief or unhelief of mortals can not in the least ef fect those truthe that God has established inherent in nature, and with which Hisunbounded universe swarms. Much time and thought have been spent in trying to prove the existence of God by metaphysic. al arguments. But arguments of this character require such acuteness of inteilect and close attention to understand them that they are therefore useless to the greater purt of men. But while so many are incapacitated to comprehend metaphysicai argumente, they can find in flowers irrefulabie arguments adapted to common capaci. fort and relief to suffering humanity. ties and founded upon things obvious to reasoni" Let him hear the fragrant voice a sermon on the misistry of flowers.

CURRITUCK JOE.

The coast of North Carolina is not an inviting one. From their earliest acquaintance with it sailors have shunned Cape Hatteras, and many a foreboding shake of the head accompanies the words with which they speak of that stormy point. The loom of its sinister clouds is the signal to put close reefs in the topsalls, and the skipper whose vessel has drifted too near its desolate shore paces his deck, with keen eyes scanning the western borizon, all through the long and storm-filled hours of the night.

And the winds have a different tone when they surge along the waves that roll foamcrowned and furious against its shifting sand dunes. There is an exaltation, a victorious shouting, la their rush, that seems to tell of a surrune sovereignty.

North of Hatterns, and running southward from the border of Virginia, is Carritack sound, a respectable sheet of water, separated from the ocean by a narrow belt of sand, such as defends the entire senboard of North Carohina. This-linmense sea bar-for it can be called nothing else-is not an inviting place of residence, and when the heavy northeast gates come roaring down the coast, there is a wildness and gloom pervading it that is anything but cheerful. Wrecks are frequent during the winter and early spring, when the grent gales are most prevalent, and then the men at the government his saving stations have wet and stormy work to do. The sullen boom of n gun will bring them forth to meet the rush and sting of chilling sleet, when night's darkness lies so heavy on the earth that sight is impossible.

Currituck bar has long been a favorite resort of mine, more from a sentimental menary, perhaps, than from its actual pleasures. Still, I find in its wildness, and hi the peculiar, seemingly wreck-haunted, atmosphere that is its heritage, an antidote for the tell of a life that has seen but few other changes besides the annual visits to its barron wastes during the season when game was to be found along its shores. My journeys began quite a number of years ago, before the life saving service had planted its stations along the tempest-swept beach, and were inargurated by one of those apparently unimportant occurrences that pass and are forgotten, mitll nu epoch in one's existence brings them out with startling vividness.

I was rounding through the market at Norfolk, baving been called there by business, which, while giving me many spare hours, still necessitated a stay of several days, when I saw some line ducks exposed for sale, veritable cunvas backs, and plump as partridges fresh from a buckwheat studde. As I was to start for home the next morning, a desire to become the owner of some of these took To session of me, which their owner was quick b) gare lve.
"B: t. rt ke a pair or two of 'em; they're right good """g and fat and tender," he said, looking it, at mo with eyes so full of kindliness, and yet so woful with serrow, that I was startful and did not answer immedi-

Where?" I questioned, eager to know something of the own r of such strange eves.

"Down on Chrritock." "Where is that!"

"If you mean ducks, yes."

The unit appeared to be a little surprised to find that a person existed so ignorant as not taknaw that famous locality, and then he gave no the disired information.

"It's In North Carlina, instout of Vir and is one of the coast sand bars," "Is the game plentiful?"

"Do you live there?" "Yes. I only come to Norfolk once or twice a year, to stock up. I'm not a truckster; I

A few more questions elicited the knowledge of how to get to the favored land, and then I purchased the entire lot of his ducks, giving bins, much to his surprise and gratification, his full price.

As I turned away with my prize he sald: "If you ever come down that way and want some good duck shooting, just ask for Currituck Jos. All the fellows as paddle down that way know me," I thanked him, and having hired a colored boy to earry my purchase, went back to my

Il was two years after my visit to Norfolk, when one morning the telegraph brought word that a ship belonging to our house had gone to pieces just south of Currituelt light.

Some one will have to go down there and gather all the news there is to be found out." sald the senior partner, and I immediately volunteered; for at the sound of the name, there came before me the gleam of the piteous eyos, and the ceho of words that gradually grew distinct as "Chrrituck Joe,

I arrived at Norfolk two days after this and took passage on a small steamer plying in the waters I wished to visit.

We came to the place where the first drift from the wreck lay, and found a mass of plankbur, tern and broken, and strangely exscaplifying the supreme power held by the wrath of wind and wave, when brought into contention with the work of man. Further out along the beach were piled boxes and bales, carefully covered by fragments of the dock and bulwarks.

As we neared one of these, a ligure, roughly clad in a brown targaulin suit, rose from a sitting posture beneath a rudely formed that of rent canvas, and I saw before me the man I had met in the market at Norfelk two years previous, "There's Currituck Joe," said my guide.

"He's te a a lookln' out for the goods." The man approached, walking with a curious, shussing guit, as though deprecating way adverse criticism that his appearance

"No, the ship belonged to our house, and the eargo was consigned to us." 'There's not much of it left for anybody,'

"I see that there is but little; where are the

"Gone north. There was only three; the est got washed away by a sea just as the ship

Argek. "llow were the three saved!"

"Oh, n boat put out to 'em, as soon as there was hight enough to show they were left." With a natural modesty, Joe refrained from saying that he was the man who spurred the boat's crew into action, and led them into their successful struggle for those three

Having no special call to hurry back to New York, I wrote a letter to the firm, giving them the information needed to guide Mom regarding the fusurance, and dispatching this to the nearest postoffice by the boat that had brought me to the bar, accepted Joo's invitation and spent the next week with Mun. We had a short gale the next night efter our nrrival, but Joe called it a baby affair; and as the sun shone out the next day and the shooting was good, I thought he must would be obliged to all the arreers to remit at he right, though the wind that had shook the o er.

Semi-Weckly Interior Journal but and reared across the bur in the early watches of the night, sending great masses of sand sweeping in from the sea and far out on the sound was as fierce as any I had ever heard.

When I left the bar Joe pressed me to visit him again next year. After my return to Norfolk I sent him a box full of pipes, tobacco and fishing and hunting stuff I had found out he would like, acking a large can of whisky, a heverage he need when a storm had wet him to the skin and chilled his blood, and only at that time; and shortly after my arrival home received a shaple, but whole souled letter of thanks. The first day of the next December found me in Norfolk on my way to Curningk, and I reached Joe's hut one evening just as the sun sunk in a glory of amber and pink that nunt tinme. Joe was awny, but the door was open, and having stowed my traps and some boxes I had brought for him, I threw a lot of driftwood on the smonldering embers, and soon had a glowing thre, lighting the rudely furnished room, in whose corners the gathering twilight had made deep shadows.

Joe crime in shortly after the fire had got well nuder way and gave me a cordial greeting, and a very fuvorable report as to the prospects for a good two weeks' sport. We were out early the next morning, and for tive days had excellent weather and line shooting, but the morning of the sixth day brought a change. The sky was covered with a thin gray vapor, and the sun shone in this like a great red ball. Gradually the grayness grew deeper, and the vapor thickened to vnst masses of cloud.

Then the sun changed its line to a dull yellow, and slowly faded out from sight, and as it disappeared the low moaning in the air grew wonderfully intense.

"Ther'll be a hard blow," Joe had sald in the early morning, and after eating our brenkfast we strolled over toward the seaward Joe's lint was sheltered by a collection of sand dunes, among which its low roof rese like a sharper point. It stood midway between the ocean and the sound, and a short walk was all that was needed to reach either. When we came to the beach the waves were rolling up its changing sands with a regular monotony that seemed utterly devoid of floreeness, but soon a wild, sobbling murmur sounded across the wide eastern expanse, and they grew more restless, and began to toss little foun-crowned crests against each other. The day during its first part was a changing dreariness. The somber bue of the sky, and the storm sounds in the air, deep ened, and the great waves darkened, as the gloom above them assumed a density that soon was sadly oppressive. Occasional puffs rulled the water, and these quickly grew heavler and more frequent.

Then Joe, who had clambered to the top of a sand dune, cried: "There she comes," and hastening to his side, I saw what seemed a lunge wall of white foam rushing shore-

Then some sharply driven rain drops struck hard on our faces, and, with a roor, the first great gust of the gale surged past us, and the foam-crowned waves rolled thusdering up the beach.

We found shelter in a low shell made of wreck drift, and there watched the sea. It was a grand and a wild sight, that tunnuk of water with the wind singing over h, and there was a fascination in it that must be felt to be known. As we stood watching this tempest-painted picture, a man enme swiftly down the bench, the wind driving him before it. He made for our shelter, and, as soon as he could regain the speech that the gale had deprived him of, said:

"There's a schooner trying to dr shore above m, but I don't think she can weather the point yonder."

Joe sprang toward the beach. "We must have the boat ready," he said. There were several men in the shed, and one asked: "Do you know the vesself" "Yes, it is Mark Ward's schooner. I know her by the yellow square on her quarter." I noticed that the men turned their glance townrd Joe, and that his face grew peculiarly hard and white; but it was only for a moment, and then it assumed the old look, only a strength and firmness came to the eves that made them burn with a strange brilliancy. He seemed more erect, too, as he grasped a line that houg against the wall of the shed, and there was a tone of command in his voice, as be said: "Come boys, we have no time to lose," and went out, and down the beach, battling with the wind that almost took him off his feet.

We followed, and soon reached a low building, in which the men who were Joe's compaulons, and he, kept a small but serviceable lifeboat. It was where a short point jutted out just hisido of a large hendland, and formed n shullow, partially protected bay. The wind was from the northeast, and as this point reached out toward the southward. It and a narrow belt of comparatively smooth water bordering its leeward face. The Loat was run close to this, and the men, lying down under the lee of the sand dunes, wntched the vessel to the northward, as she made desperate fight for nu offing.

"She can't reach out beyond the point," said one, "for she can t carry sail enough." The schooner was under short canvas, having close reefs in all her sails; and still the wind seemed to bury her in spray, as it drove her down toward the sand. To spread more sail was impossible, as that already set was strained to its utmost capacity, and a larger surface would bring upon it more power than it could bear. "No, sir, she can't reach out beyond the point," said the eldest man of the group, "and t shoals fearfully there. I don't think there is much chance for either ves el or crew," Again the nich tarned toward Joe with the strange look I had before noticed, but he made no sign. All this time the schooner had been drawlng nearer, driven on by the cruel gale, and signals for help were new flung out, showing that her crow had given up all hope of reachlng the open water beyond the point. Joe, seeing this, removed his waterproof suit and stepped into the bont. A coll of small line lay in the stern, its end run through a fair-leader. This end he passed to the men on shore, and then sat down and grasped an oar. As he did so his companions seized the boat und gave her a shove clear into the water, three of them springing in with Joe. Then, with strong, steady strokes, they bent to their work and the boat shot forward just as a loud, despairing hall came sounding in on the wind. We looked seaward and saw that the schooner had grounded and was lying brondside to the waves, which were rolling on board of her in huge masses. Their force was terrille and they soon drove her stern nround, each blow making her masts tremble like reeds. This new position was an easier one for the vessel, but the men said that she would not last long, as the seas were growing and the wind still kept rising. We saw her men ellinging to the rigging, but our main interest was centered in the boat, which was making slow progress out toward her. It was a hard battle and a desperate one, for the waves came rolling in, heavy and foam-erowned, and the wind roared along, tossing their curling crests far up the sand. But Joe and his companions were stout and fearless und had often been in similar positions, and slowly they neared the ground ed craft. Often, however, it looked as though they would be flung back, and at other times we lost sight of the boat and thought her awamped. Then she would appear once more, and keep on toward her goal. The whooner made a lee of smooth water, and after a half hour of work that seemed more than human, the boat ran into this, and we sent her a cheer of hope; but it was too soon, for the next instant a huge wave swept around the vessel's bow, and, coming over her side, chught the lifeboat and flung it in on the deck.

We now some struggling forms, but could distinguish nothing, for the sprays were driving between the masts, enveloping the men as In a mist. We also saw that they were getting the small line clear, and soon a signal told us to hanl it ashore. We did so, bringing a stout tow-line, which we could see the men make fast to the schooner's mainmast as soon made the sound look like a vast sheet of doras we had the cud secured to a heavy spilo sunk in the sand. Then we saw them working at the lifeboat, and in a little time sho was launched, and a limp form passed carefully into her. The men then pulled slowly toward the shore by the line, a dangrous undertaking, as the wind made the now heavily loaded loat surge fearfully, and the waves here down on her as though they would sweep her from sight. But she battled ou, and in a short time, though it seemed ages to us, reached the smoother water under the lee of the smaller point and was soon drawn well up on the beach.

We gathered round the best and I was shocked to see, lying In the stern sheets, the pale, still face of Currituck Joe. A glinstly cut on his head was oozing blood and there was the mmistakuble sign of death's nearness about him, which sait a chill to my heart. The presence of life even now was only discernible by a slight twitching of the lips, the evidence, as I knew, of intense suf-

"Flung against her mast," said one of the boat's crew, in answer to an inquiry. "I knew he would give als life away for some one, but didn't think it would be for Mark

A stout man was standing near by look ing at Joe's white face with tear-wet eyes. His breast was heaving, showing that his heart was throbbing thereely, and when he henrel the words, he said:

"I am sorry, boys; I wish it was me lying there instead of Jos," Though curious to knew the meaning of these, to me, strange words, I felt that Joe should be attended to, and had him carried to his home.

"Can you get a dector?" I questioned. "There's none on the bar, and no one on the mainland would cross the sound to-day, ting the fire in order, he prepared some sup-per, of which we partook, and then sat down by the glowing blaze, for the wind was raw and chill, and sent Its currents through every crack und erevice.

"What is it that links Joe's past to the life of the schooner's skipper!" I asked.

"They were neighbors and schoolmates over beyond the sound," answered the man, "nud both likely young fellows when the war come, Joe had begun studying law, and Ward went to sen with his father, the captain of a coaster. Well, they both culisted, and Joe was taken prisoner. Ward knew of this, and came home wounded. It is said that Joe and he were both after the same girl, but the story is that she favored Joe. Well, when Ward reached home, he gave out that Jon was dead, and then made up to the girl. She mourned for Joe six months or more, but, you know, a young nature will throw off grief, and Ward was very attentive, and sympathetic, and consoling, and the result was that she promsed to have hun. "He harried up the wedding, saving that he wanted to get buck to his regiment, for his womel was about well, and so they were married. The next week Joe got back, having been exchanged, and when he found that he had lost the girl he give right up und come over here, and he has lived on the bar ever

"Wurl sald that he truly thought Joe was dend, but the folks all think that he trumped up the yarn just to get the glrl; in fact, they know it, but they keep still for the woman's sake, as she is nice and a good neighbor.

"As for Joe, he had set his heart on her so that the loss just broke him all up, and he never went back to his old home again. He has lived on the har ever since, carrying his tish and game across to a landin' to sell and now and then running up to Norfolk. He never met Ward, who went coasting again as soon as the war was over, until he saw him to-dny.

"We didn't think be would go off to help, but Joe was true grit. He has savid lots of people, and it does seem too had that he should meet his death while rescuing the man who blasted his hie."

But so It was; and two days after that we buried him in a grave made among the sand dunes, in whose company he had passed so many lonely years. It was his wish that no stone nor sign should mark the place, and we held his wish sacred.

"Let the winds sing free above me, and the sun shina across the place," he had said, when talking of this time, in the days when we had thought it a long way off; and there, with the surf roar someling over his unuarked grave, Currituck Joe sleeps lu peace; the sorrow that wrecked his 150 and love forgotten. Thomas S. Colifer in Overland Monthly.

A Hig Load of Saw-Logs

The higgest load of saw-logs over hauled over a road in Washington peritory recently arrived at Seattle. There were eighteen logs rnuging from 24 to 120 feet in length. The longest ones are intended for vessels, masts, and one has a diameter of thirty-six inches and another forty-eight inches in the middle. The latter contains 13,000 feet of lumber, and the total measurement is about 100,000 feet, Their gross weight is about 650,000 pounds, and they are to be shipped to the Atlantic coast. - N/W York Tribune.
